

I oppose any changes to the current FCC indecency standards that would allow television and radio stations to broadcast expletives and nudity on the public airwaves, even if brief or "fleeting."

The Supreme Court has confirmed the FCC's authority to enforce policies regarding expletives and nudity, especially during times when children are likely to be watching or listening.

Relaxing the current policy would not serve the public interest and I urge the FCC to reject all proposals that would allow for the broadcast of expletives and nudity on FCC-licensed stations.

There are still good men in the world. I am a good man, and I am doing something. I oppose any relaxing of indecency standards, and am deeply dismayed at how far they are already relaxed because viewing such media materials degrades girls and women in boys minds, causing them to seek after other more addicting media influences, which can then lead them into fornication, infidelity in marriage, divorce, and even violent sex crimes.

Over half of marriages now end in divorce, and I think most of the root causes can be found in the relaxing of FCC policies over the years, in addition to the filth that Hollywood and the media have been willing to create and parade across our screens--all in the name of freedom of 'expression'. Sex sells. I understand. But I see that as cheating. If a product is good, it should sell itself, without a scantily clad young woman in the screen.

The price is too high. If these policies continue to relax, I fear there will be less and less good men in the world willing to care for and support families, raise responsible children, and honor and protect the virtue of women. Society, civilization and our way of life hang in the balance based upon your choices. Please choose to prevent the media from exploiting human weakness as a hook to make more money.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

Ben Gaul